

MIRFIELD.

APPALLING DEATH.—On Tuesday afternoon last, at the corn mill adjoining the Railway-station, Mirfield, the son of the miller, finding that the mill wheel did not move, went down to ascertain the cause. On descending, he discovered blood upon the wheel, and in another minute the obstruction was cleared, and his attention was called to the body of his father floating down the stream, a mangled corpse. It is supposed that the victim of this dreadful death had, whilst he was engaged in cleaning out the wheel with a boot-hook, become entangled in the goit. The name of the deceased is Wooler.
