

A TERRIBLE explosion of petroleum happened at Mirfield Railway Station yesterday morning. One of several casks of petroleum on a truck was found to be leaking. On a goods inspector, named FRANK BOOTH, approaching with a light to examine it, a terrible explosion took place. Booth was so severely burned that he died in the evening. An assistant named STEAD, who was with him, fortunately escaped uninjured.